Emma Freerks' Miracles Moment

I originally came to Miracles during my senior year in high school while I was working on getting my silver cord. However, I continued to come out even after I graduated. I loved working with the horses and watching the students grow throughout the classes. Unfortunately, part way through college, I had to stop coming, and then the pandemic completely pulled me away for a couple of years. Though once I graduated, I knew I had to come back, and I am so happy I did.

Now more experienced and wiser, I brought in my knowledge of struggling with my own disability to help work with these students. I worked with a young boy who struggled a lot with hyperactivity and even wanting to be on a horse. Working with him I took my struggles with ADHD and realized he needed a lot of sensory input. For the rest of the classes, I would just nonstop talk and engage with him. We would often just list off fun facts for an entire class. Even as a first-time rider he became very capable in controlling his horse and would be excited to come to class. His mom was so appreciative of this she would come to me after class and thank me.

Make Miracles in 2024—Volunteer with Us!

It's time to train for a new year of classes! This year new volunteers must train on side walking and participate in at least six classes before training in our other class roles.

From the Director's Desk

What a challenge the weather has been. We are so grateful to our Property Manager, Nick, who handled the herd when the winds and heavy snow—20+ inches of it—made it impossible for any of us to get out to Miracles safely. Thank you to Miracles' neighbor, Andy Tomas, who came once the winds died down to open up the driveway up to the arena. Prior to and after the snowstorm, volunteers layered up and braved the wind chilling temperatures to do chores and give Nick a much needed break. Through all of this, the herd did well.

The herd teaches us all so much. Huddled together, the strong or the leader makes the paths to the food or shelter, doesn't face the storm head on, and makes sure everyone is safe. Horses, being a prey animal, show emotion directly, for example, by paying attention to you. When you give love and affection to your horses, they will offer love and affection back to you. Horses show their sense of humor by wiggling their ears. "No" from a horse is a tail swish and hind foot stomp. Just like people, no two horses will answer you in the same way. Sometimes you need to pause, to give the horse time to think.

From the horse you can learn much that translates in life with a friend, partner, or a team. This has so many benefits for building relationships and bonding with each other. As we know, a team encourages creativity and increases accountability and productivity. If you have the desire to work with horses, head to the Miracles in Motion website: miraclesinmotion.com and sign up under Volunteers. We and the herd will look forward to having you as part of the team!
